

Games (business) people play.

Developed in partnership with Kensington, the Stinger is the first and only game pad designed specifically for laptop users; packing a full suite of standard gaming controls into a package no larger than the diameter of a DVD. Research with gamers revealed 'appropriate aesthetics' to be a key attribute valued by those who use such devices when traveling on a plane and in business presentations. The product is compact, thin, lightweight and ergonomic, with a highly configurable interface that is optimized for use in situations where space is minimal. The Stinger also has the capability to be used in 'mouse' mode for presentations, driving a myriad of software applications and reducing the pieces of hardware a 'road warrior' has to pack and carry. The product met with outstanding reviews and success in the market for more than five years, setting the standard for laptop gaming.